Through a trial of many years and through every nation of civilized men, AYER'S CURE, PECTORAL, as befores found to afford more relief and to cure more cases of pulmonary disease than any other remedy known to mankind. Cases of apparently settled Consumption have been cured by it, and thousands of sufferers who were deemed beyond the reach of human aid have been restored to their friends and usefulness; to sound health and the enjoyments of life; it is all powerful antidote to diseases of the lungs and throat. Here a cold and set cold on the lungs. The dry, hacking cough, the glassy eye, and the pale, thin features of him who was lately lusty and strong whisper to all but him CONSUMPTION. He tries everything; but the disease is growing at his vital, and shows its fatal symptoms more and more until all his frame. Is it taking the CURE PECTORAL, now; it has stopped his cough and made his breathing easy; his sleep is sound at night; his appetite returns, and with it his strength. The dart which pierces his side is broken. Scarcely any neighbor hood can be found which has not some living trophy like this to shadow forth the virtues which have won for the CURE PECTORAL an impeachable renown. But its usefulness does not end here. Nay, it accomplishes more by prevention than cure. The countless colds and coughs which it cures are the seed which would have ripened into a dreadful harvest of terrible diseases. Influenza, Croup, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Pleurisy; Whooping Cough and all affections of the throat and lungs are easily cured by the CURE PECTORAL. If it take them, and they will find it an invaluable protection from the invidious power which exacts of the parent sheep from many a flock
the darling lamb from many a home.

ful destruction of human life, caused by sexual their form and to give Medical Advice

a description of their condition, (age, occupadespised cause.

A STORY OF RHODE-ISLAND.

CHAPTER III.

The "untold love" of the young couple might have run its course much longer had it not been for the arrival of a certain Mr. Granger, Captain in His Majesty's 22d Foot. This had occurred about two years previous to the opening of our story. The 22d Foot was then stationed at N. York, and the young Captain, to whom provincial life seemed rather dull after the gaieties of London, had gladly improved a leave of absence to test the far-famed hospitalities of colonial aristocracy at Newport.

His father had been an early companion in arms of Colonel Dudley; and when that gentleman heard that the last packet from New York had brought among its passengers "Mr. Granger and servant" the great family coach was ordered out and the Colonel soon stood in the parlor of the "Crown." His card came up to the young officer just as the latter was dining (and willing) with his new found friend Tom Bannister, the gayest and most dashing man about town, that Newport then could display. The two young men had met together like drops of water on their first introduction and already had planned more frolic than would have occupied a twelvemonth in execution.

"From the name, I suppose it to be an old friend of my father," said the Captain as he handed over the card for his friend's inspection.

"Then I lay you a dozen of Port," rejoined Tom "that he has come to carry you off to his sepulchral old place on the Island, where you will be treated with abundant hospitality and killed with politeness."

"Nothing to do there, eh? What sort of place may it be?"

Imprisoned, a great wide-roofed farm house swarming with negro servants.

"Well!"

"Item, a broad and big willow tree on which you may hang your harp, if you happen to have such a thing in your baggage."

"Ah!"

decks and the other innocent pleasures of the country."

"Oh!"

"Item—by the way it won't do to forget her—an exceedingly handsome daughter."

"Walter, show the gentleman up."

If Colonel Dudley had heard this conversation it may be questioned whether his politeness would have been so scrupulous or his greeting so cordial at his first interview with the son of his old friend; but as he did not possess the reader's privilege of hearing and seeing all that passes behind the scenes he soon fulfilled Tom Bannister's prediction by insisting that Captain Granger should make Dudley Farm his home during his stay on the Island.

The Captain hesitated awhile. On the one hand Tom Bannister, the freedom of an inn, glorious suppers, and a succession of frolics; on the other the chance of a flirtation. The Captain decided for the latter. If there was one point on which he was specially weak, it was his admiration for the opposite sex. Without being heartless, he was tormented by a vague morbid desire of attracting to himself, the interest, the sympathy, and even the love of all he met, regardless of the fact that what was to him only a passing pleasure, might sometimes cost the best heart's blood of his victim. Such characters are happily not frequent.

We may talk no pleases of the coquetry of the ladies, but the wounds their eyes inflict upon their admirers do not pierce to the very quick, like the arrows of a male fawn.

Let us however be just. This selfish surface feeling not seldom covers a capacity not yet developed, for true love. There comes a time when the power of this is felt, and all these triflings are swallowed up in one deep passion, like rain drops in an ocean.

We read in tales of magic, of wonderful armor, against which all attacks are vain until there comes the one enchanted weapon which can pierce through it. Magic itself often seems to walk in such armor.

THURSDAY MORNING, FEB. 4, 1858.

The U. S. Army.

A bill has been introduced in the United States Senate, by Mr. Davis of Mississippi, late Secretary of War, for increasing the present organized military force of the country by an addition of some seven thousand men, &c. The total number of men now in the U. S. military service—including the Irish Legion that has been sent to chastise the 'saints' of Salt Lake, and the 'Plug Ugly' rebels who are engaged to shoot and stab American freedom in Kansas—is somewhere in the neighborhood of Fifteen Thousand; and the Davis bill, if passed by Congress, would carry the aggregate military force of the country up to Twenty-two Thousand men.

It will be remembered by the intelligent reader that President Buchanan, in his annual Message to Congress, proposed the authorization of the four new regiments for the Utah service; and here comes Mr. Senator Davis, one of the Southern supporters of the President, with a bill to provide for raising three or four times as large a force as the President ventured to ask for. The proposition of Mr. Davis is being subjected to a sharp and vigorous canvassing in the Senate; and we trust that it will never become a law unless its passage can be shown to be indispensable to the safety and well-being of the country.

We are, as a nation—and feel that we may well be—jealous of standing armies and large military forces of every kind.—We know how easily they are elsewhere made the most effective tools of tyranny and despotism, and it should be our care to avoid all dangers in that direction. If we behave ourselves, as a respectable civilized people should do, having due regard to the rights of other nations while sedulously careful to preserve our own there is no reason to fear that sort of aggression from others which would render a large military establishment needless on our part. Why then, do we need any increase of the military force of the country?

If we look at the enormous cost of our present military establishment, we shall see another potent reason against any increase of its size, except in case of absolute necessity. The number of U. S. soldiers now in actual service, as already stated, is about 15,000. The ordinary annual expenses of the military, as destroyed by the People through the U. S. Treasury, is about Ten Millions of Dollars, but last year, as shown by official documents, the military expenses of the government were FIFTEEN MILLIONS—or an average of one million dollars to every one thousand men! And

Of course this vast amount of money is not wholly consumed by the mere subsistence of the army, but covers also the construction of military works, and all the expenses, direct and incidental, pertaining to that department of the public service. But the sum is enormous—the public benefit comparatively small—and the waste, swindling, and misuse of the public money in this direction, must be perfectly outrageous.

Mr. Bradley, of Providence, submitted the following resolution, which was read and passed:

Resolved, That the Bank Commissioners be directed to inform this House what amount of money they have received from the various Banks in this State for fees and travelling expenses, stating the amount they have received from each. Also, whether it has been their practice to visit more than one bank on a single day; and if so, what has been the largest number visited on any single day; and also, if it has been the been visited on a single day, to charge each for a full day's service, and full travelling expenses.

Mr. Shiefford, of Newport, gave notice that he should to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, resubmit to introduce an act amending the act authorising the city of Newport to regulate hackney coaches and other vehicles; also, an act amending the chapter of the Revised Statutes relating to the conveyance of real estate.

Mr. Bradley, of Providence, presented the petition of Ellery Bentley, O. W. Prince, and fifty others, for such an amendment of the charter of the city of Providence as will give to the electors thereof the election of the municipal officers of said city; which was received and referred to the select committee on that subject, consisting of Messrs. Gilmore and Bradley of Providence, and Spaulding of Smithfield.

Up to the end of the fifteenth century, only the period, colon, and comma, had been introduced. The latter came into use latest, and was only a perpendicular figure or line proportionate to the size of the letter. To Aldus Manutius, an eminent Italian printer, in 1499, we are indebted for the semi-colon; and also for the present form of the comma. He also laid down rules now observed in regard to their use. The note of interrogation and the note of exclamation were not added till some years later, and it is not known by whom.

Invented commas (.) were first used by Guillemet (pronounced guyl-e-met), a French printer, and were intended by him to supersede the use of italic letters; and the French printers now call them by the inventor's name. But these marks are, at present, used by English printers to denote quoted matter. In a London book—The Art of English Poetry—printed in 1807, it appears that this mode of denoting quoted matter is of late origin, as such matter is therein denoted by being set in italic. It is not known by whom the apostrophe and dash were invented.—Surgeon's School.

The Captain hesitated awhile. On the one hand Tom Bannister, the freedom of an inn, glorious suppers, and a succession of frolics; on the other the chance of a flirtation. The Captain decided for the latter. If there was one point on which he was specially weak, it was his admiration for the opposite sex. Without being heartless, he was tormented by a vague morbid desire of attracting to himself, the interest, the sympathy, and even the love of all he met, regardless of the fact that what was to him only a passing pleasure, might sometimes cost the best heart's blood of his victim. A bill has been submitted to the Legislature to authorize the issue of Tennessee to issue $1 million post notes, payable one year after date.

Matrimony.

Some machine Poet "lets on" in the following style, to the tune of "Pop goes the Weasel":

Matrimony is a nut
For every man's digestion;
When the shell is fairly cracked
Pop! goes the question.

Pretty girls will sigh and blush—
Smaller all they can, sir—
Till from out theirouting lips,
Pop! goes the answer.

Cupid fans the holy flame—
Rarest kind of arrow—
When it gains a certain height,
Pop! goes the person.

Quite throughout the honey moon—
Made of racy colors—
Into sundry dry goods till,
Pop! goes the dollars.

When the year has born its tail,
Round the corner, (maybe,)
Out upon the happy world,
Pop! goes a baby.

Mother gives it eatin tea,
Father gives it brandy,
And down its gastric tube,
Pop! goes the candy.

Madam lets her husband scold,
She must be the whipper,
And above the youngster's heels,
Pop! goes the slipper.

Bachelor, who lives next door,
Stands it for a season;
But before the year is out,
Pop! goes his reason.

Maiden lady, up the stairs,
Stamps each moment faster,
Till from the ceiling underneath,
Pop! goes the plaster.

"All round the neighborhood,
Such antics are enacted;
And while mamma is scolding him,
Pop! goes distractred.
